THE COURT: Don't we get back to my two questions to you: Whether all agricultural use structures are single family dwellings and vice versa? Can't that explain why they are listed separately? Because someone who's got a single family dwelling that they are putting up on their residential property in a Resource Management Area or something else that's not a farm, then they would have to the a permit, correct?

MS. SIMON: Yes.

THE COURT: But if it's an agricultural use structure and a single family dwelling but it meets the definitions of both, couldn't that be exempt?

MS. SIMON: Then why would the legislature have separately said one is jurisdictional in Resource Management and one is not?

THE COURT: Because not all single family dwellings are agricultural use structures, that's why, because they couldn't just say that agricultural use structures are exempt if they want to have jurisdiction over the single family dwellings that are not agricultural use structures.

MS. SIMON: However -- and this gets into
